"I could also see Stolz and Cochran sweating in their costumes. They were probably hotter than I was, with the red lights shining down on them. Maybe this was a night curred by an Old West pimp, and the sounds were made to induce brothel goers to leave their wives and families for real this time and go out on the road with a circus act that could easily attain psychedelic uncertainty, tragic happenings, comic blunders, and a caravan of followers from all walks of life." - Justin Hurty, Daytrotter

"Drakkar Sauna, two dudes from Lawrence, Kansas, very much belong to that Fugs school of weirdness. Almost every one of their songs consists of acoustic guitar, rattling percussion and some of the most gorgeous (in that weird Fugsy way) old-timey harmonies you'll ever hear. They sing about canoes and death and the Civil War and loose women — the sorts of things that matter to folks like you and me on a daily basis." - Yancey Strickler, eMusic

"Jeffrey A. Stolz and Wallace J. Cochran are bandits from Lawrence, Kansas who steal hearts and blow minds. They are a two-headed crooner beast. In the world of nomadic-folk-rock they are perhaps best known as inventors of the tambourine shoe. Carefully balancing their reputation as down home American folks, with the reality of their sublime intellectualisms, these troubadours deliver the goods." - Monkeyclaus
